

Diamond Hitch by E.J. (Ted) Hart

As the tourist trade developed in Banff and Jasper in the late 1800s, a special breed of men emerged to lead wealthy, latter-day explorers into the Canadian Rockies wilderness. These guides and outfitters were often as undisciplined and unkempt as their clients were refined and polished. But together this unlikely alliance forged the last chapter in the history of exploration of the Canadian Rockies. Hart's book Diamond Hitch describes the colourful lives and times of such men as Tom Wilson, Bill Peyto, Jimmy Simpson, the Brewster brothers, Fred Stephens, and Curly Phillips—the true mountain men of the Canadian west.

The cover of Diamond Hitch is a painting that depicts legendary Canadian Rockies guide and outfitter Jimmy Simpson, who built Num-ti-Jah Lodge overlooking Bow Lake. It was painted by Carl Rungius in the 1920s. Rungius (1869-1959) was the premier wildlife artist of his era, but was also renowned for his landscape and western paintings.

At the time of book publication, the painting hung in the Shelburne Museum (Vermont), but the piece has since been sold, with no records as to its current owner.
